SEMINAR THEME

People and Politics : New Dimensions in Historical and Political Understanding

The two elements of any society, the people and politics, interact and influence each other to a great extent. Since the advent of democracy, people have always played a crucial role in the political process. It is a two-way interaction in which people constantly change the landscape of politics and in return get affected by it.

From the French Revolution to Arab Spring people have been changing their fate and have been giving new directions to politics. In the French Revolution glorious ideas of liberty, equality and fraternity were propounded and led to a chain of events that is still in continuum.

People were again at the core of decolonisation movements across the world which gave birth to new nations and transformed the politics of international arena. Similarly it was the people, who knocked down the Berlin Wall in 1989 and made a crack in the Iron Curtain that led to the end of Cold War and further paved the way for capitalistic hegemony, letting it design and decide every action of our modern world. This dynamics of people and politics overtime gave birth to political ideas that govern every walk of life be it social, cultural, economical to the extent of becoming an ideology itself.

Politics in the modern world is a result of certain historical events and is often seen as peaceful conflict resolution strategy. Modern world is still marred with numerous issues such as poverty, violence, racial discrimination, unequal distribution of wealth, war and many more. Growing environmental crisis presents a challenge of existence in front of human race, to deal with all the issues, people have no tool but politics in their hands. People must learn from history and further ensure a participative decision making for their problems rather becoming a tool in the hands of politicians. New directions of politics must empower and give voice to the powerless and ensure a just and equitable society.

" The study of history is the beginning of political wisdom."-Jean Bodin
